NOTICE

Dues are assessed for each calendar year. Notices of dues are sent in November prior to the year in which due. This is done to allow you to pay and take the income tax deduction in the year you prefer. Members who have not paid by February first are re-billed. Members who have not paid by May first are dropped from membership.

It is urgent that the society be promptly notified of changes of address. Bulletins which cannot be delivered by the postal service will not be forwarded due to high postage rates.

The Battle of Piedmont, June 5, 1864^{*}

by
Colonel Robert J. Driver, Jr.

To set the stage for the Battle of Piedmont we must go back to March, 1864, when Gen. Ulysses S. Grant took command of all the union armies in the field. He planned a coordinated attack by these armies to prevent the Confederacy from shifting troops by rail to concentrate against one Union army, as they had done at Chickamauga in September. The main federal thrusts were to be by General George G. Meade's Army of the Potomac in central Virginia, General William T. Sherman's Armies of the Tennessee, Cumberland and Ohio against General Joseph E. Johnston in Georgia, and General Nathaniel P. Banks against Mobile. Each of these major drives were to be supported by smaller ones – General Samuel D. Sturgis from Memphis against Nathan Bedford Forrest in Mississippi, General Benjamin Butler and the Army of the James up the James River toward City Point and Petersburg, General Franz Sigel up the Shenandoah Valley to seize Staunton, Generals George Crook and William W. Averell from Western Virginia to destroy the Virginia-Tennessee Railroad and the salt works and lead mines in Southwest Virginia.

Crook struck the Confederates under Generals Albert G. Jenkins and John McCausland at Cloyd's Mountain, defeated them and burned the New River Railroad Bridge. The Confederate infantry units that fought in this battle would be part of those on the field at Piedmont. They suffered heavy casualties in the battle.

Averell failed in his attempt to take Saltville and destroy the lead mines.

Sigel was defeated at New Market by General John C. Breckinridge and fell back to Cedar Creek and took up a defensive position near Strasburg.

Meanwhile, Grant and Meade were hammering away at Lee in the wilderness and at Spotsylvania Court House. Grant knew that the only way to defeat the Confederacy was to destroy their armies in the field. Despite heavy losses, Grant and Meade continued to receive large reinforcements from the North. It was to be a battle of attrition. Reinforcements were ordered to Lee, but they had to come from Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas, but this took time, and they were halted at Petersburg to stop Butler's advance. Lee was forced to draw General Breckinridge, with all the infantry, from the valley to his army. General John Daniel Imboden, a native of Augusta County, was left in command in the valley with only the 18th and 23rd Virginia Regiments of Cavalry and Davis' Battalion of Maryland Cavalry and Captain John McClanahan's Virginia Battery. McClanahan was living in Augusta County when the war started and many of the men were from Augusta.

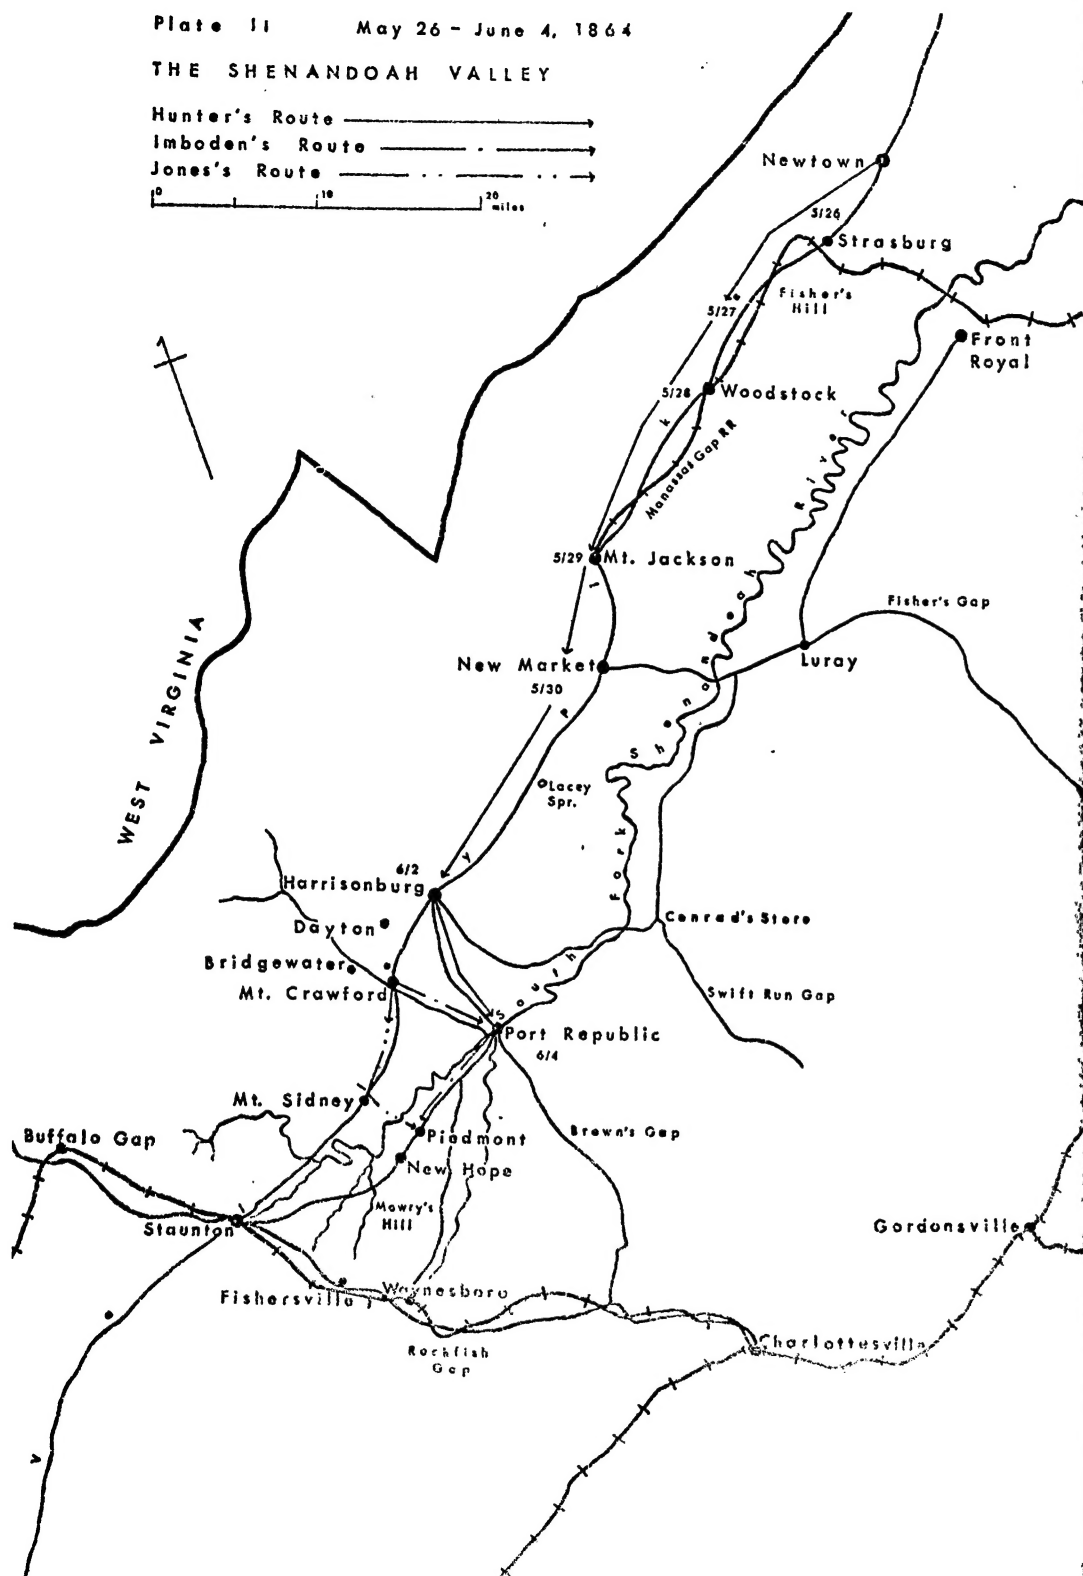

Four days after his defeat at New Market Sigel was relieved by General David Hunter. Grant reinforced Hunter and ordered him to march on Staunton, Lynchburg, Charlottesville and Gordonsville. Crook and Averell were to move east to help him take Staunton. Grant also ordered General Philip H. Sheridan, with a large Cavalry force, to take Gordonsville and Charlottesville. The only forces left to face Crook and Averell were the small Cavalry

Brigades of McCausland and Colonel William L. "Mudwall" Jackson. Partisan Rangers, under John S. Mosby, Harry Gilmor and John C. McNeil, would operate against Hunter's flanks and rear, but would be unable to stop him.

Hunter, with 10,000 men, moved to Fisher's Hill on May 26th. He continued southward through Woodstock and Mt. Jackson to Harrisonburg, arriving on June 3rd.

Imboden's scouts had kept him informed of Hunter's movements. Advised by General Lee that General Breckinridge's infantry could not be spared from his army to return to the valley, Imboden called out the reserves from Augusta, Rockbridge, Rockingham, Bath and Page Counties. These were men over 45 years of age and boys under 18, who were not already in Confederate service. These would total about 1,900 men. Marquis' boys battery from Staunton and Augusta County, four companies of Cavalry, and the rest served as Infantry. Imboden also ordered out all the Nitre and Mining Bureau Troops from Western Virginia and organized and armed the detailed men, convalescents from the hospitals and furloughed men into units to defend Staunton.

Lee did order General William E. "Grumble" Jones, at Glade Spring, near Bristol, to march to Imboden's aid. On May 31st Jones began moving his infantry and artillery northward by rail. These units, who would bear the brunt of the Battle of Piedmont, were the 36th, 45th and 60th Regiments and the 45th Battalion of Virginia Infantry and Captain Thomas A. Bryan's Virginia Battery of 6 Guns. General John C. Vaughn's Brigade of Tennessee Mounted Infantry were ordered northward from East Tennessee.

When Jones arrived on June 4th, being the Senior Officer, he took command. Imboden had organized the infantry into two brigades. The first, under Colonel Beuring H. Jones of the 60th Virginia, consisted of the 60th and 36th Regiments and the battalions of soldiers organized in Staunton. The second brigade was under Colonel William H. Browne, a West Pointer, who commanded his own 45th Regiment, the 45th Battalion and two regiments of reserves. One regiment of reserves, under Colonel Kenton Harper, numbering 700 men, was kept in reserve.

Hunter's scouts reported Imboden fortifying behind the North River between Mt. Crawford and Bridgewater. He decided to break the railroad at Waynesboro, thus cutting Staunton off from reinforcements, communications and supplies from eastern Virginia. If the Rockfish Gap Tunnel could be destroyed, it would force the Confederates to use wagons to haul supplies over the Blue Ridge Mountains. On June 4th Hunter moved his command to Port Republic.

When Imboden learned that Hunter was moving eastward instead of toward Staunton, he planned to engage him at Mowry's Hill or Round Hill, Two heights below New Hope. When Jones arrived he agreed to these arrangements and the troops moved to this area on June 4th.

Hunter, at Port Republic, was delayed in his move toward Waynesboro because of difficulties in laying a pontoon bridge. Lieutenant Meigs, his engineering officer, was off playing cavalryman. Meigs' death, while chasing Confederate scouts in Rockingham County a few months later, would cause the burning of the town of Dayton. Hunter decided to move directly south, through New Hope, and break the railroad at Fishersville.

On the morning of June 5th the Union Cavalry moved south and engaged elements of the 18th Virginia Cavalry near Mt. Meridian. The Confederates, under Captain Francis Marion Imboden, the General's brother, were initially successful, but were soon overwhelmed and driven back after a hard fight, losing 82 prisoners. General Imboden, hearing of the rout, led the 23rd Virginia, Davis' Battalion, the Reserve Companies and McClanahan's Battery into action and stopped the Federal advance near Bonnie Doone. Jones, without consulting with Imboden, moved the rest of his force to Piedmont and had his infantry began building breastworks of fence rails. While Imboden disagreed in fighting at Piedmont, the position had merits. The river was unfordable for wagons and artillery. The river and the cliffs along the south bank helped secure Jones' left flank. The Federal Infantry would have to charge the Confederates up hill. The fences and tree lines provided both cover and concealment. While both Mowry's Hill and Round Hill were dominating terrain features, they could be easily flanked by the larger Union force.

Jones positioned the infantry from the river to Piedmont and placed Vaughn's Tennesseans, who had just arrived, on his right – but leaving a gap of from several hundred yards to a quarter mile. He initially covered this void with his artillery. When Imboden and the Cavalry were forced back they were placed on Vaughn's right. These two brigades, numbered 1,500 to 2,000 men of Jones available force.

Hunter advanced on Piedmont with General Jeremiah C. Sullivan's Division of Infantry, 12 regiments. In support were 8 regiments of cavalry and 6 batteries of artillery. Hunter attacked on a two brigade front, with two regiments in reserve. The Confederates repulsed the first two attacks with small loss. Hunter brought up his artillery, under Captain Henry A. Dupont, a West Point Graduate, who adopted, for the first time, the concentration of fire of his guns on one Confederate sector. He first battered Marquis' Boys Battery, manned by inexperienced but brave youths, and a section of Bryan's Battery, posted on the edge of the woods along the Staunton road.

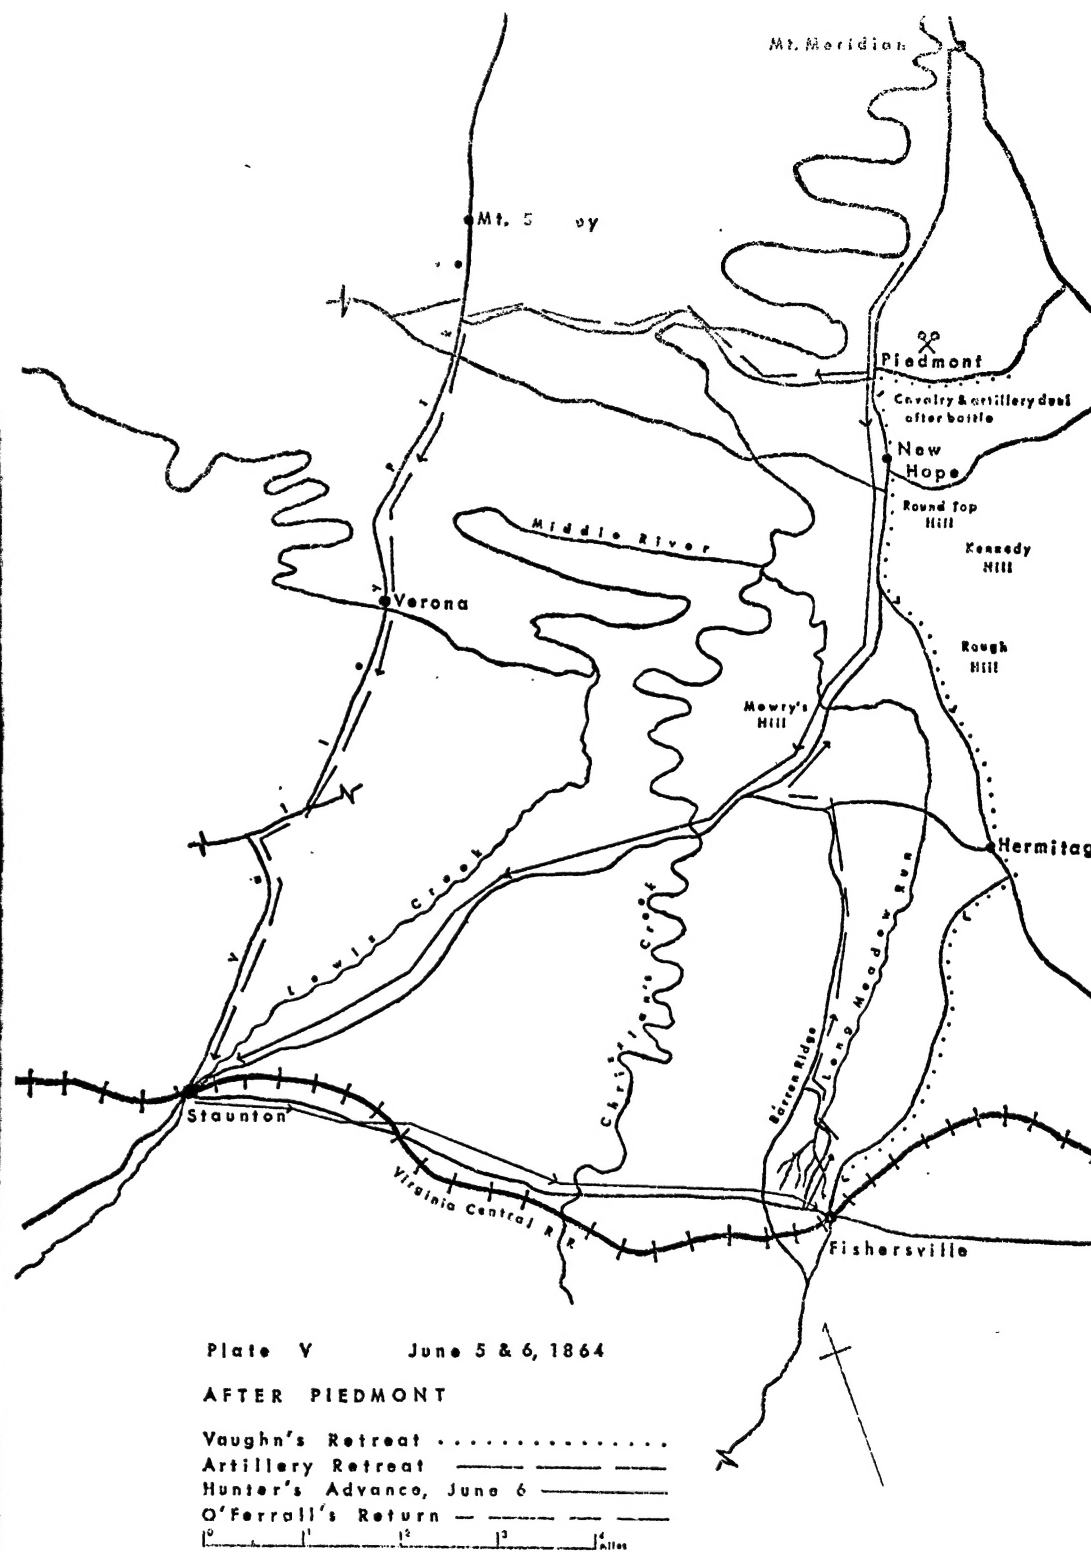

As Dupont watched "In a comparatively short time the concentrated fire of the Union batteries was too much for these guns, which were compelled to abandon their position and fall back rather precipitately to a point, as near as we could judge, farther down the road and beyond the village... "

The withdrawal may have helped the Confederate Infantry, as some of the shells from a 20-pounder parrott gun manned by Marquis' Boys tumbled end over end and landed in the breastworks of the 60th Virginia Infantry, causing casualties and disrupting them. Bryan's Battery was hampered by defective powder and fuze plugs, causing the same problem.

"I next concentrated the fire of my twenty-two pieces upon McClanahan's Battery immediately in front of the village of Piedmont with the result that some of the houses were considerably damaged...our fire soon began to tell upon the battery...and it likewise limbered up and went to the rear...the federal chief of artillery now turned his guns loose on Bryan's Battery's four long range guns, with similar results. The Confederate infantry repulsed the third Union assault, pursuing the enemy into their own lines, taunting them with shouts of "New Market! New Market!," as they engaged them in hand to hand fighting, almost capturing one federal battery. Dupont's Gunners drove them back and now concentrated their fire on the breastworks, blasting gaps in the log barricades. Hunter believed he was defeated and started his wagon train to the rear. He was disappointed in the performance of his infantry and surprised at the combativeness of the small Confederate force.

Jones ordered Vaughn to send reinforcements to his left flank. The 1st Tennessee Cavalry, 31st, 39th and 59th Tennessee were sent. The Tennesseans were forced to cross the entire line of battle under heavy enemy fire to get to the new position. They lost heavily in this move. Jones coolly rode along the lines encouraging his infantry yelling above the roar of battle "Aim low, boys and hit'em below the belt. And be sure you see them before you shoot. Aim low and make every shot count!" Shooting downhill the tendency is to overshoot a target.

About 1:30 Hunter's officers talked him into making one more attack. They had noticed the large gap in the Confederate lines, now no longer covered by the artillery. The 54th Pennsylvania and the 34th Massachusetts were sent up the ravine near the Shaver house and on the flank of the Confederate infantry. Captain Bryan observed the movement and opened fire on the Federals. Jones ordered him to continue to fire to the front as he didn't consider the movement a threat. He later changed his mind, as the enemy drew nearer, and directed Bryan to fire on the advancing column.

Imboden wrote after the war "We saw this flanking brigade emerge from the woods and move at quick time up a gentle slope directly on Jones's (sic) flank. Even then, if Vaughn (sic) and I had had orders, or permission (or) discretion, to move a rapid charge on...the enemy, (we) would have had at least checked it and given Jones time to change front to the right and repel it." Vaughn and Imboden sat on their horses and did nothing, with their men pleading and shouting to open fire on the flank of the enemy. Jones, realizing the danger, sent a courier to Vaughn, the senior officer, but by the time he found him, it proved to be too late.

The federal infantry and part of the 1st New York Cavalry, gained the flank of the infantry battalion of Thomas' North Carolina Legion, raised on the North Carolina-Tennessee border, with men from both states, commanded by Major William Stringfield. Jones rode the scene of the action and shouted "Brave Carolinians, I'll bring you help." He pulled the 60th Virginia infantry out of the lines and sent them across the road to aid the Tar Heels. The 60th had sustained heavy casualties and was exhausted from the all day fight in the heat and dust. Major Stringfield watched Jones ride back and forth remembering that "He vainly attempted to repel this assault."

When the Yankees were thirty steps away the 60th broke and fled to the rear, exposing the Legion to a cross fire. A sergeant in the Legion blamed the 60th for the disaster. "They stampeded right through our regiment and compelled us all to take care of ourselves." It became a hand to hand struggle that went on for fully one-half hour. The Confederates were giving way. Lieutenant Carter Berkeley, of McClanahan's Battery, recalled that "Jones...ordered me to follow him with my section, which with Harper's and Harman's regiments (the reserves) he proposed to stop the stampede, which was getting serious. How vain the attempt to rush untried soldiers through a stampeding line of battle to check and drive back a victorious line advancing, old veterans could hardly have stood it. We were soon surrounded by our own flying men, and in sight of the Yankees. Our men began to give way, and Jones became desperate, rushed impetuously to the front, followed by many of Harper's men, right on the Yankee line of battle, which poured a deadly volley into them, killing Jones and many others. I had just gotten my guns unlimbered and would have fired but was preemptorily ordered by a staff officer of the dead General to limber up and try to save my guns. I would have lost them if I had stayed a minute longer."

The staff officer who directed Berkeley to retreat was probably Captain Martin, who also created disorder in units trying to hold their position by riding around shouting that General Jones had been killed.

Vaughn and Imboden mounted their men and retreated down the New Hope Road, covering the fleeing infantrymen and cannoneers. After conferring with Vaughn, Imboden determined to make a stand at Mowry's Hill.

Lieutenant Berkeley found a section of his battery, under Lieutenant Park Collett, on the road. He ordered them into battery, as the Yankee Cavalry was in pursuit on that road. "...Before we had time to go into battery the enemy burst from the woods, with yells of triumph, sabering, shooting, and riding down our poor fellows." Berkeley ordered the gunners to fire. One of them hesitated, saying "Lieutenant, we will kill our own men." Berkeley jumped off his horse to pull the lanyard, but both gunners pulled them, mowing down men and horses.

General Imboden rode up and praised the action of the Cannoneers and told them to hold the position. He sent the 18th Virginia Cavalry to their support. Major Stringfield with eighty of his brave Tar Heels and Tennesseans had arrived earlier, and helped drive back the Federal Cavalry. Imboden had asked if they would fight again, and Stringfield told him "Yes, like hell if you give them a chance." This brave band of Confederates held the position until nightfall, when they fell back to Fishersville.

Vaughn telegraphed Lee of the death of Jones and the Confederate defeat. Lee wired back there were no additional troops available. The Tennessean determined to retreat to Waynesboro and Rockfish Gap.

Thus ended The Battle of Piedmont. Staunton was seized and portions being used by the Confederates burned. The railroad was destroyed from Buffalo Gap to Waynesboro. Mt. Torrey Furnace was burned when Hunter marched toward Lexington.

The Confederate casualties in the battle have never been determined. General Vaughn called on his surgeon to get reports from all of the units engaged, but his report has never been found. Confederate losses were about 1,500 including 900 prisoners. Colonel Jones of the 60th Virginia was wounded and captured. Colonel Browne was mortally wounded and died three days later. The 36th Virginia lost 29 killed, 36 wounded and 112 captured. The 45th Virginia lost 6 killed, an unreported number wounded and 325 taken prisoner. The 45th Battalion lost 2 killed, 3 wounded and 55 captured. Bryan's Battery had one man wounded. McClanahan's Battery lost one man wounded but 4 taken prisoner. Marquis' Battery lost 4 killed, 1 wounded and 1 captured. The Augusta and Rockbridge Reserves lost 14 killed, 29 wounded and 7 captured. Thomas' Legion lost 13 killed, 21 wounded and 42 captured.

Private William R. McDowell of the 31st Tennessee, wrote his father that the Tennessee Brigade lost 298 men, 59 from his regiment. His company lost 9 of 18 men, 2 killed and 7 wounded. Colonel Eakin of the 59th Tennessee was captured. Major Robert McFarland wrote that the 1st had 46 killed and wounded of 118 men present. Federal losses were 150 killed, 650 wounded, and 75 missing. A number of these men died of wounds and are buried in Thornrose Cemetery. Side by side with the Confederates.

R. Donahue Bible, of Mohawk, Tennessee, has shared information with me on the Tennesseans in the battle. "Several members of my family, including my great, great grandfather Henderson Kite, his brother Peter Kite, their brother in law, William Roberts, their cousin William Kite, and several neighbors,...were shot down on the field at Piedmont. Their close friends John and Henry Reynolds were both killed there, and buried on the field. Their father made the 600 mile round-trip to Piedmont later that year to return the bodies of his two sons for burial. They were packed in a wagon load full of salt, after they were dug up from the garden of a Piedmont family. ...Captain John James Jarnigan of the 1st Tennessee Cavalry, was cared for by the Johnson family of Piedmont, until he died in September. Captain James Burem was killed and buried on the field, and Lieutenant Isham B. Dykes had his leg amputated later that night at Staunton hospital."

In 1866 35-40 bodies were removed to Thornrose Cemetery in Staunton from the battlefield, including Captain Welch of the Tennessee Brigade. Other bodies were found buried on the Sheets Farm, and several were identified as members of the Augusta Reserves. I'm sure many more still lie buried in unmarked graves where they fell on the battlefield.

I hope this talk has given you a better understanding and appreciation of the significance of the Battle of Piedmont.

The Tinkling Spring Presbyterian Church

Grady Summers*

In 1737, the Shenandoah Valley's Christian Society, "The Triple Forks of the Shenando Congregation," sent a petition to the Donegal Presbytery. The "Shenando Congregation," as they were called, was letting it be known to the Presbytery that they intended to build a meeting house. This petition brought to a head the feelings and frustrations of a hundred years.

Beginning shortly after 1669, when the German John Lederer explored the Shenandoah Valley, there came a stream of immigrants into the Valley. Many settlers were fleeing from religious persecution in their native lands. These included a larger number of "Scots-Irish."

Unfortunately, there was some religious persecution in Virginia in these days, as well, including the "Toleration Act," which prevented Presbyterians from expanding their places of worship. In the Fifteenth and Sixteenth centuries, however, "places of worship" were not always as beautiful as they sounded.

With our beautiful and expensive churches today, it is difficult to imagine the circumstances under which the pioneers worshipped. In fact, all of the pioneers worshipped in homes. The central Shenandoah Valley had clusters of homes open for meetings in central places by 1740. These homes shared the preaching of three Presbyterian preachers in the Valley: the Reverends John Thomson, John Craig, and James Anderson. Sometimes, the gatherings even met in the open air, under a shady tree.¹ The first sermon ever delivered in Augusta County was preached in the home of John Lewis, one of the largest in the area.

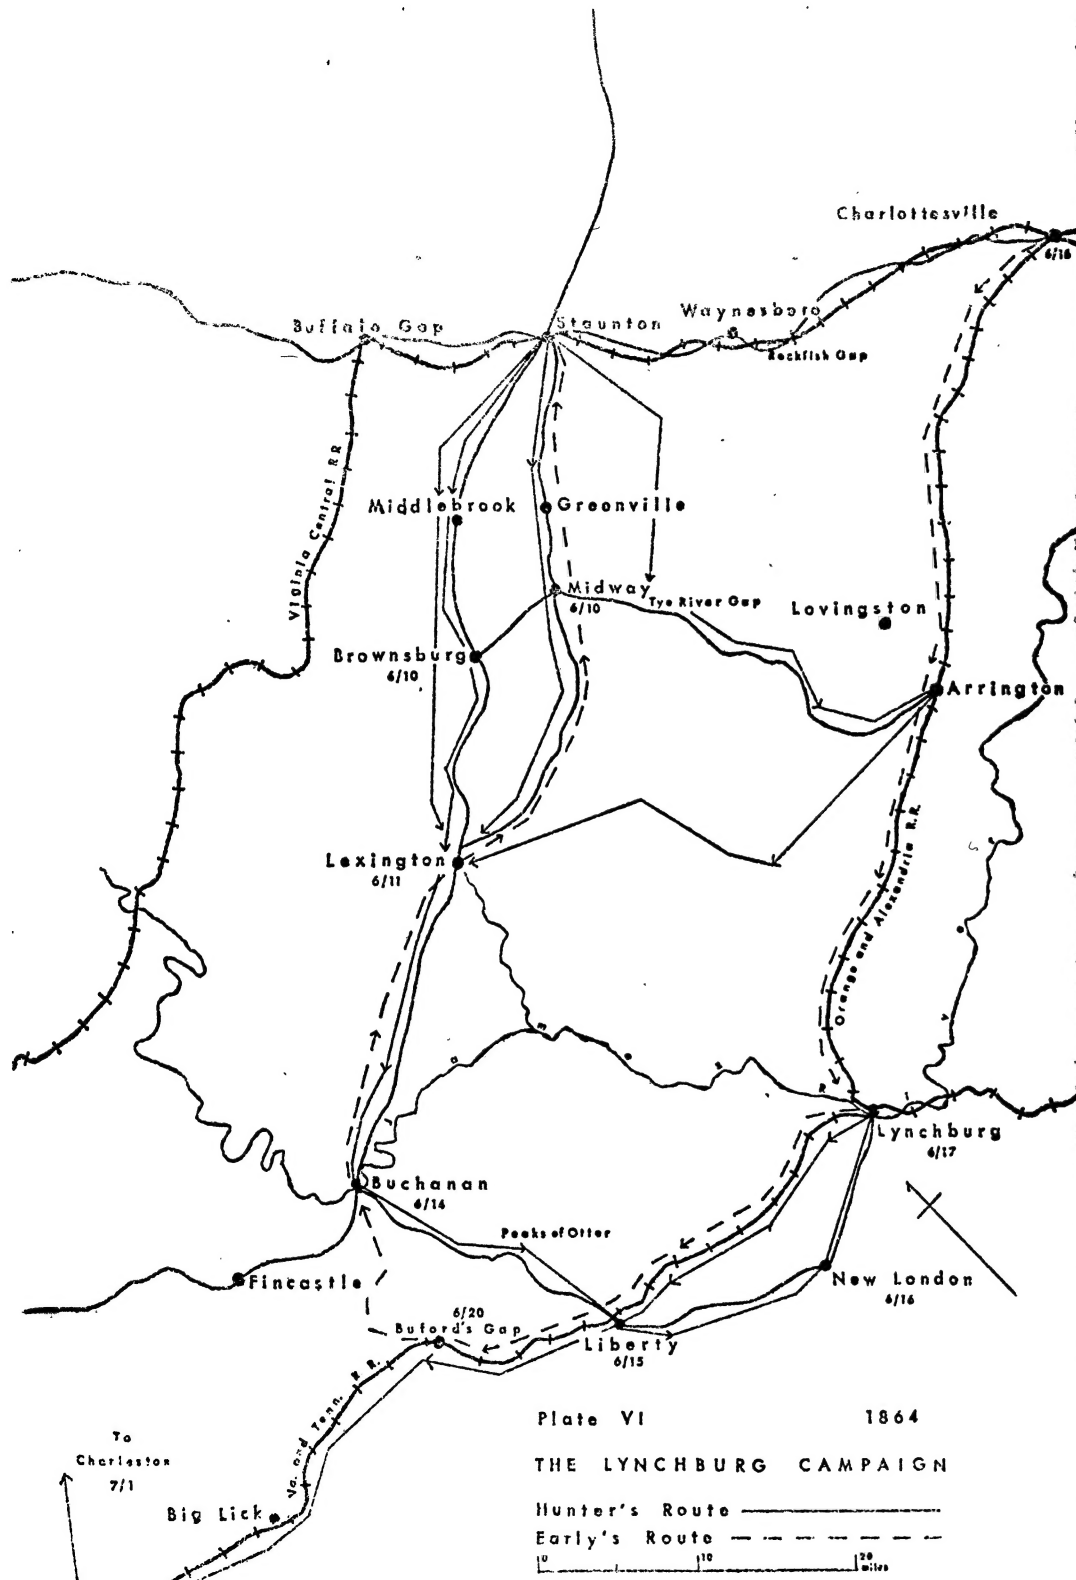

After some time of moving from house to house, the Presbyterians decided it was time to build a permanent meeting place. First, however, a location had to be decided upon. The location decided upon was primarily out of convenience, for it was at the crossing of two main roads through the county. The "highway" through the county at this time was a road that ran through the following present day points: Sugar Loaf Mountain, Arbor Hill, Folly Mills, Tinkling Spring, Dooks, and Jarman Gap.² When presented to the congregation, however, there was dissatisfaction. Those who disagreed were told: "If any Sufficient number is dissatisfied with what is Done yt they will Give their Reasons in 15 Days in writting Why they are not Satisfy'd...[sic]" Later, the preacher wrote that there was such disagreement on the location of the church that he was finding it difficult to hold the church together. Interestingly enough, such a dispute arose between well known John Lewis and James Patton, that the issue was never resolved, and a personal grudge was held as long as they both lived.³ The issue was voted on, and the Tinkling Spring site received 51 of the 66 cotes, and the alternate site—advocated by the preacher, John Craig—received the other 15 votes. In the church's record, as written by clerk Jno Christian, the church decided to "unanimously agree" that the Tinkling

Spring site was to be purchased and that any former disputes should be cleared so the church could go on with the Lord's work. This unanimity was established, apparently, as an act of unity. Unfortunately, it stands in stark contrast to Tinkling Spring's Reverend Craig, a mean-spirited preacher who, in retaliation for his site being rejected, refused to ever drink water from the spring, even though it was the only water source around on a hot mid-summer day.⁴

Now that a site had been established and the Donegal Presbytery had granted the settlers "Congregation" status, the time had arrived to purchase the land. For this purpose, five commissioners were appointed "to chuse & buy a plot of ground to build a meeting house...[sic]"⁵ These commissioners were James Patton, John Finly, George Hutchison, Jno Christian, and Alexander Breackenridge.

The first permanent building at Tinkling Spring was the meeting house. It was located thirty yards northeast of the spring on a level spot of ground. Today, this spot lies between Tinkling Spring's Community building and the cemetery wall. The original cemetery was sixty-five yards west of the church. There was also an "powder room", or a "Retiring House," as it was called. It was probably located near the spring for convenience. The meeting house was rectangular in shape, measuring twenty-four by fifty feet. There were doors at both ends, facing north and south. The pulpit was centered in the fifty-foot west side, near the spring. There were a number of high horizontal windows, formed by removing a log from the wall. While it may seem inefficient to have so many windows that would vent the heat in the winter, one must remember that the pioneers were used to open air meetings, and were used to the cool temperatures and breezes that accompanied these meetings.

The sanctuary's interior was very simple. The floor was dirt, and the "pews" were benches. The benches were constructed by splitting a log and driving wooden legs into the bottom. There was no source of heat, but nevertheless, baptisms did not decline in the cold months!

The "Retiring House," mentioned above, was a place for rest and refuge. A fire was kept there constantly in the winter, and it was probably a very popular room. Since pioneer families traveled in large groups to lessen the threat of Indians, this room was no doubt a place for groups to socialize before meetings, or to spend one's lunch break during an all day worship service.

The building of the church, however important it may have been, was not immune from the squabbling and fighting—a characteristic of this church. On Sunday, April 14, 1745, Reverend Craig wrote, "this being the first day we meet at the Contentious Meeting house about half built T. S. [Tinkling Springs] . " Later, Craig would write, "their leaders proud Selfinterested Contentious & ungovernable all of them closehanded about providing necessary things for pious or religious uses. " In March, 1746, the church sued anybody delinquent in their payments. It continued to harass and hound its congregation for money, and whenever members didn't pay enough to meet the pastor's salary, they were sued. When lawsuits didn't yield enough money, the church began renting out seats in the sanctuary. The seats ranged from £1.12.6 to £0.12.0, and were a means of collecting the "minister's stipend."⁶

Several years after the building of the church, a small addition was built on the south side of the meeting house. The addition was demanded by a wealthy member of the church, for a place to seat his family. When he left the church, the alcove was used for seating the few blacks then in the Valley.

The preachers in that day were commonly called the "Parson." It was probable that Parson Craig wore a periwig, or a headdress of false hair that closely fit the head, whenever he appeared in public. The early sermons at Tinkling Spring Church were orthodoxly Calvinistic, reflecting the beliefs of John Craig. His only written sermon we have today is the one he delivered at the end of his twenty-four years as pastor. Although he calls it a "short discourse," it is 7500 words long and is divided into fifty-five divisions and sub-divisions. The sermon was probably reflective of Craig's other preaching, and was plain, unadorned, and strenuous—a manly testimony to Calvinism.⁷

The Sundays designated for worship were used solely for that purpose. The worship service began at ten o'clock, and recessed for an hour at noon. It reconvened at one o'clock, and ran until sunset. The singing of Psalms was a regular part of the worship. All the Psalms came from the pastor's Psalter, which might have been the only copy in the valley.

The sacraments of the church were considered a vital part of the worship in those days, and at Tinkling Spring, about 100 people per year were baptized. This sacrament was considered so important that the parson often made "unseasonable calls" to baptize sick children.⁸

The most important sacrament was the Communion. It was so highly regarded that people were often denied it as a punishment. In the early days of the Tinkling Spring Church, members must have passed an "examination" of sorts to take Communion. This consisted of a visit from the parson to determine the member's religious experience and knowledge, sometimes including a quiz on the catechism. If the member qualified, they were presented with a metal token permitting them to partake in Communion.

The early days of the Tinkling Spring Presbyterian Church were somewhat troubled. From begrudging parsons to lawsuits against members, the early Christian inhabitants of the Valley often clashed over issues. Nevertheless, by the middle of the 1700's, Tinkling Spring had become an important Christian church serving the Lord in a frontier wilderness. An excerpt from The Watchman of the South, a southern newspaper, said it best: "...a generation of men and women that accomplished in their poverty what wealth cannot purchase, and reared another generation to hazard death for freedom of conscience and liberty of person—for a State without a King.' Such as one you may find at Tinkling Spring, in Augusta County, Virginia."

Mt. Horeb Presbyterian Church*

Mrs. William B. Patterson

Mt. Horeb Presbyterian, located near the village of Mt. Meridian in northeastern Augusta County, was established in 1857.

In the 1740's, Scotch Irish Presbyterians settled along the banks of Middle and South Rivers between the present day villages of Mt. Meridian and Harrison.

Of primary concern to these intrepid pioneers was their attendance at divine services. For many years, these families traveled to Augusta Stone Church, a distance of some fifteen miles, a formidable journey, particularly in the winter months.

As time passed, a need was felt for a church in the more immediate vicinity; and in the first Session Book of Mt. Horeb, this account of the establishment was written by the Rev. Mr. William Brown, pastor of Stone Church:

"That portion of the congregation of Augusta Church residing in the vicinity of Weyers Cave had long felt the inconvenience of their remoteness from their house of worship. But it was not until the summer of 1855 that it was deemed practicable to take measures for their accommodations. The building was erected in the summer of 1856 and was dedicated to the worship of God, August 21, 1856, at which time divine services were continued for some days, conducted by Rev. John H. Babcock of Harrisonburg, Charles S. M. See of Tinkling Springs, and William Brown of Augusta."

The building which the Rev. Mr. Brown mentioned as having been built in 1856 is the same building now being used, although it has undergone extensive remodeling from time to time as the needs of the congregation have changed. It is interesting to note here that the land on which the building was erected was deeded to the Trustees of Mt. Horeb Presbyterian Church by members of the Ewing family on July 4, 1877, twenty-one years after the church was built.

A petition was presented to Presbytery at its meeting at Tinkling Spring Church on November 20, 1856. According to the Rev. William Brown, Presbytery appointed a committee consisting of the Rev. Joseph Wilson of the First Church in Staunton, the Rev. William T. Richardson of Waynesboro, and David Gilkerson ruling elder from Tinkling Spring to visit the field and report at the spring meeting of Presbytery and at the meeting of Presbytery held at Colliertown on April 9, 1857. The committee made a favorable report.

The church was officially organized on July 25, 1857 and Mr. James W. Crawford and Mr. James A. Patterson were elected to the office of ruling elders.

Mary Elizabeth, daughter of James A. Patterson and his wife Mary, was the first child to receive the rite of baptism in the church on April 16, 1858. This is of interest to this group as she grew up, married Mr. Charles Crawford and lived at "Bonnie Doone," the estate just west of this church, which figured in the battle of Piedmont.

It is an indication of the dedication of its members that for ten years the work was carried on without a full-time minister. In 1866 the Manse was built and the congregation called its first full-time pastor, the Rev. H. H. Hawes. An interesting note from the Bible of Elizabeth Poague Patterson, a charter member of the church, states that Mr. Hawes preached his first sermon here on April 7, 1867.

*Mt. Horeb Presbyterian Church was host to the Society, May, 1995.

At one time, almost all Presbyterian Churches had a Session House, set aside for meetings of the ruling elders, perhaps because they were small buildings and thus easier to heat. Ours was located to the north of the church where the parking lot is located. I remember going to Sunday School there. In an early session book I found mention of the fact that as warm weather had arrived it was time to start Sunday School.

Until modern transportation made them unnecessary, this church had outpost chapels, one a home mission chapel in the Brown's Gap area of the Blue Ridge at Grottoes and the Mountain View Chapel near Crimora.

Of special interest to me has been the connection of the Patterson family to this church. Among the signers of the petition to establish this church were 12 Pattersons by name and several women whose maiden name was Patterson. There used to be a saying in the neighborhood that the ladies at Mt. Horeb either were Pattersons, had been Pattersons, or hoped to be Pattersons. There are many other families such as the Fultons, Hoys, Wonderleys, Woods, and Stickleys, whose roots go back to the beginning of the church and whose descendants continue to worship here.

Now with its stately white columns, it stands facing the historic Rockfish Road over which the early settlers hauled their produce to market over the Blue Ridge Mountains through the Rockfish Gap to Scottsville and down the James River to Richmond.

List of persons living in Augusta Co., Va., who have learned and repeated, correctly,

The Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly, before May 1st, 1897. To each of these Rev. Jas. P. Smith, Editor of the Central Presbyterian, of Richmond, Va., will present a Certificate.*
